

Here's a hard truth that might not be easy to hear:

We don't win every case.

That's not to say we don't give every case everything we've got—we do. But sometimes, no matter what we give, the outcome isn't what we hoped for.

And when that happens, it stays with me. I replay decisions. I think about what I could have done differently. And I carry those lessons into the next case.

But here's the other truth:

This work isn't just about winning.

It's about showing up the right way. Doing the work with integrity. Standing by the people who trust you. Fighting for them because it's the right thing to do.

Not every case ends the way we want it to.

But every person deserves someone in their corner who's willing to fight for them.

That's who I will always strive to be.

Take care,

Mason
