

Duck season may be behind us, but the memories from this year are still fresh.

There's something about being out on the water before sunrise. The air is cold, quiet, and still. The kids are seeing it all for the first time.

Moments like that reset everything.

I spend a lot of time helping people navigate difficult situations—legal problems, life problems. But through it all, if there's one thing I've learned, it's this:

If you don't have something that keeps you grounded, it's hard to show up as your best for anyone else.

For me, that's being right here in Moncks Corner. This is the kind of town most people drive through on their way somewhere else. But for me, it's where my roots run deep. The history, the wildlife, and some of the best hunting and fishing you'll find anywhere.

Whatever that place is for you—protect it. Treat it like it matters.

Because it does.

That's where the best version of you begins.

Take care,

Mason
