

There are many things about myself and West Law Firm that are easy for anyone to see. Certain things are visible from the outside: the verdicts and success stories. Our community service.

You might even see me on the weekends at church or on the ball field.

And then, there are the things you don't see...

The late nights. The tough conversations. The prayers before walking into a room.

Sometimes the job is about listening patiently to someone as they cry on the phone.

Sometimes it means staying up and writing a demand letter even though it's midnight, because you gave your word it would get done.

Sometimes we have to walk a client through disappointment when the verdict doesn't land the way we prayed it would.

These moments are the reason I always say that there are two people you call when you're hurting: your pastor and your lawyer.

And in reality, my role is a little of both sometimes. Not in title, but in practice.

Because people don't just call our office with legal questions...

They call us when they're experiencing fear, grief, and confusion. They call when they need a steady, understanding ear in addition to legal strategy.

That's when I listen. I pray. I serve.

If you're going to trust me during one of the hardest chapters of your life, you deserve someone who fights for your case — and cares for your heart as well.

And that's the mission behind West Law Firm.

If you or someone you know here in the Lowcountry needs help with their personal injury case, we are here to listen and to help you through it.

Take care,
